SANTA MONICA, Calif., Feb. 1 (AP).-Roman Polanski'a lawyer told a judge today that the film director has left the United States and refuses to return to court to be sentenced for a sex offense. A beach warrant was issued for Mr. Polanski's arrest. Mr. Polanski, 44, was to have been sentenced for unlawful sexual intercourse with a 13-yearold girl. He had been released from prison Friday after 42 days of psychiatric tests. The release was on his own recognizance.

Superior Court Judge Laurence Rittenband said that he would give the director 10 days to surrender, but issued the arrest warrant immediately.

Attorney Douglas Dalton stunned a packed courtroom when he announced, "Your honor, I received a call from Mr. Polanski this morning advising he would not be here this morning." The judge asked whether Mr. Dalton believed that Mr. Polanski

Paper Plays Big Role in Nicaragua Protest

By Alan Riding MANAGUA, Feb. 1 (NYT).-As soon as a nationwide strike began here last week, the opposition newspaper, La Prensa, joined the protest by stepping up its campaign against the government and by refusing to take advertisements.

The newspaper's response was hardly unexpected, because the strike was called to pressure the government to clear up the murder three weeks ago of the paper's editor, Pedro Joaquin Chomorro. But the response also reflected the leading role long played by the nawspaper in trying to end the Somoza family's 45-year rula ninth day, La Prensa has emerged as the strike coordinating center. As the editors and journalists prepared to bring out its single midday edition yesterday, sup-porters of the strike and op-ponents of the government gathered at its offices, giving interviews, providing information and offering moral support.

La Prensa has assumed the proportions of a major political party trying to overthrow a dic-tatorship, benefiting from the government's decision to tolerate of Nicaragua. Within days, the a relatively free press in order paper was carrying big headlines "We see the role of La Prenss as campaigning for an end to the regime," said Xavier Cho-moro, who succeeded his brother as editor. "We try to be as objective as possible. But in a country where the government is completely based, it is difficult to be totally impartial." In the absence of a more violent struggle against the government, the political front line is still the battle of words and propaganda. Every morning, President Somoza's own newspaper, Novedades, publishes its version of events and, in the afternoon, La Prensa responds Novedades said yesterday that the strike was beginning to col-lapse, ignoring Monday's repres-sion by the National Guard of anti-government demonstrations in the northern city of Matagalpa and at the national university and United Nations offices in In contrast, La Prensa said that the strike had spread to the local Esso refinery and the central bank.

But while the strikers, both workers and businessmen, have extended their demands to include the resignation of Gen. Somoza, their leaders are slowly reaching the conclusion that the strike will end in the next few days without the fall of the gov-

Even M it ends soon, it will have been a great success," a business leader said. "We've tried to overthrow the Somozas through violent means dozens of times and have siways failed. This is the first time we've tried to do so peacefully, and look how well wve done. Never before have workers, businessmen and politicians been so united against the regime."

The fighting spirit of La Prensa is far from waning. In Monday night's edition, it carried such slogans as "The End of the Dictatorship Is at Hand," end "A United People Will Never Be Defeated."

The Chomorro family bought the newspaper in 1932, six years after it was founded and a year before President Somoza's father, Gen. Anastasio Somoza Garcia, assumed power here. #### To Cut Its London Charter Flights LONDON, Feb. 1 (UPI).—The government's assignment of charter service to a suburban London airport will force British Airways to cut 1,000 charter flights, with 100,000 potential seats, from the market in the next 12 months, a spokesman for the airline said yesterday.

BA Says Government Ruling

The airline will lose $6 million ($11.4 million), the spokesman said, because of the decision to ban full-plane charters from Heathrow Airport as of April. The decision was made in an effort to cut congestion at the capital's major air terminal. Airlines have been told to fly charter planes in and out of Gatwick and other airports The BA spokesman said that the airline protested the decision because in the past it has used in its Heathrow charter service Tridents and TriStars that had spare time in their regular schedules at the major London airport. The requirement that such aircraft be flown empty to Gatwick, and the extra crewing and maintenance costs involved, will wipe out the already marginal profits from BA's charter service, the airline spokesman said,

Burma Observers Find Little in Teng's Visit

By Henry Kamm RANGCON, Feb. 1 (NYT) .-Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping of China left diplomats and Burmese political observers as puzzled about the meaning of his journey at his departure yesterday as, they were when he ar-

Only ambassadors of countries with full diplomatic relations with Peking were invited to the airport to greet the visitor and see him off. That excluded David Osborn, the U.S. envoy. The only foreigner invited to the official dinners was the Japanese amtassador, Takeo Arita, dean of the diplomatic corps.

For almost half of his stay, the man who is one of the two most powerful leaders of the world's largest country was in seclusion in a state residence on a small island in the Indian Ocean, while Gen. ## White House Winds Up Drive To Popularize Panama Pacts

By Terence Smith

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1 (NYT). Seventy-five religious leaders from around the country spent two hours in the state dining room at the White House yesterday listening to President Carter and several of his advisers extol the virtues of the proposed Panama Canal treaties.

It was the 19th such briefing in the White House since August. An estimated 1,500 "opinleaders" from all walks of life have come as part of the Carter administration's most ambitious and intensive public relations effort since the manguration. The President's fireside chat to the nation tonight will represent the culmination of the public phase of the campaign.

Working from a 15-page memorandum submitted to the President in May by Hamilton Jordan, his top political aide, leading administration figures have devoted an unprecedented amount of time to the eight-month campaign to reverse the broadly negative public opinion on the treaties.

Prototype Effort

From the outset, the White House regarded the Panama campaign as a prototype for similar efforts it expects to undertake to win support for a new arms limitation treaty with the Soviet Union and other sensitive issues. Defeat on the Panama treaties. Mr. Jordan wrote in May, would gravely jeopardize such future foreign-policy ini-

Mr. Jordan's memo, which has been periodically updated, was fairly accurate in predicting the obstacles that would confront the

He predicted, for instance, that the far right would launch an intensive mail campaign against the treaties, as it did, and that issue would become highly emotional and partisan. He also predicted that Sen. Robert Byrd, D.W.Va. and Sen Howard Baker jr., R-Tenn., the majority and minority leaders of the Scnats would eventually support the treaties and give it the bipartisan support it would need for ratifica-

Major Impact Seen Without minimizing the importance of the compromise efforts of Sen. Byrd and Sen. Baker, the White House believes its campaign has had a major impact on public attitudes. In May, according to publiccomion surveys conducted for the Waite House by Patrick Caddell, 87 per cent were opposed to the treaties. Today, that figure has changed to a 45-per-cent approval rating, according to White House sources.

Although the treaties have yet to win the approval of a majority of Americans, White House strategists believe that the turnaround in opinion has created a political climate in which the Senate will find it possible to vote for ratification.

with which the Panama issue has been dehated that so little consideration was initially given to Panama's likely and legitime objections to treaty changes being wrought in Washington. With State Department approval, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 14 to 1 last Friday to incorporate as a new article in the treaties the earlier Carter-Torrijos executive language spelling out U.S. defense and transit rights after 2000. Only when Gen. Omar Torrijos raised the question with visiting senators did it dawn on Americans that adding a new article would compel Panama to go the risky route of submitting the treaties to another

It is interesting to see why the treaties, which won 56 per cent of the vote last October, probably would not survive a second plebiscite, or so the best judge, Gen. Torrijos, believes. Part of the explanation lies in discontents of other sorts with the generaldiscontents that surface quite easily in the freer atmosphere he has allowed to flourish to persuade Americans he's no dictator. Another part lies in growing nationalistic resentment against the very concessions he's accepted to make the treaties acceptable to the United States. Can Americans envisage, for instance, granting a foreign country the right of military intervention, or hosting wave after wave of Panamanian legislators come to check out whether the United States was fit for their diplomatic company?

Strongman Torrijos has even felt it necessary to say that if the treaties are approved he'll step down. By this offer he evidently

It's all too typical of the self-indulgence means to disarm Americans who complain of having to do husiness with a dictator, and to win support for the treaties from Panamanians who object to his personal rule. If he were in fact a dictator, of course, he would have engineered a larger margin in the first plebiscite, and the treaties would not be facing rejection in the second, and he would not be considering stepping down. Some pro-treaty Americans privately wish he were a dictator!

> On Monday, the Foreign Relations Committee corrected its Friday error and algreed to work the Torrijos-Carter language into existing treaty articles, rather than write a new one. Although the practical effect would presumably be the same, Panamanian authorities apparently have concluded that this formulation would avoid the need for a second plebiscite. That's a determinationhowever difficult it may he for some senators to comprehend—that is up to the Panamanian government to make, according to its own reading of what is politically tolerable in Panama. As it heads into floor debate. however, the Senate must keep in mind that no further assaults on Panamanian nationalism can be condoned. The substance of the U.S. demands has been met. It is thoughtful of the majority and minority leaders to offer their distinguished colleagues the opportunity to strut and posture and show their constituents how forceful and vigilant they can be in stiffening the treaties. But this opportunity must be exercised within narrow limits. It cannot be taken as license for the sort of further armtwisting that would put the treaties back into jeopardy in Panama.

Voice of Kurt Waldheim

The UN General Assembly last month passed a resolution calling for a worldwide radio campaign against one of its members. South Africa. The secretary general, Kurt Waldheim, would prepare programs, and members with transmitters would broadcast them. But it's turning out to be difficult to enlist members with suitable shortwave broadcasting facilities to do the transmitting. The Russians and Chinese have no objection to propaganda but it has to be their own; they may also be skittish about sanctioning a precedent of beaming official international broadcasts to a country that doesn't approve them. Notwithstanding appeals by the British Foreign Office, the British Broadcasting Corp. does not want to undermine its greatest esset—its credibility—by going openly into the propaganda business. The West German and the Dutch radios seem to have similar reservations.

At first, on the basis of a misunderstandof the Voice of America's transmitters in Liberia. The VOA already routinely "feeds" UN straight-news reports to African governments requesting them. But the VOA has since made clear that it must have complete control over its direct broadcasts: It won't hand over the mike. Moreover, the VOA says, its current transmitters in Liberia cannot reach South Africa reliably anyway; for that very reason, it is even now-belatedly, we might add-building more powerful facilities with which for the first time to blanket southern Africa.

We're pleased to hear that the integrity of the VOA is being protected. Apartheid deserves condemnation, as does much else, but that is not reason in itself for the Voice of America to yield up its basic function of being the "Voice" of America. When officials of the United States, or citizens, express their various and complex views on South Africa, then the proper business of the VOA is to communicate them. To broadcast programs prepared by the UN secretariat at the direction of the General Assembly is something else. We mean no dising, the UN assumed it would have full use respect to the secretary general when we say that the Voice of America cannot be the voice of Kurt Waldheim.

Warning on SALT

Thinking back, history does not record any instance in which the Soviet Union could be trusted to keep its word on a touchy issue with the United States. Even on such a philosophical issue as the Helsinki accords an agreement to ensure greater freedom of expression and movement by Soviet citizens -Moscow has been delinquent on promises.

So, it's amusing to hear the latest strategy of the Carter administration to eliminate Soviet resistance to a SALT agreement. President Carter and his advisers have decided to remove the Soviet Backfire bomber as an arms limitation consideration, and simply ask Moscow for "assurances" that the supersonic new aircraft will not be deployed in a threatening manner.

Can you see the Kremllu's military high command chuckling in their vodka? Sure, we'll give them assurances, they're chuckling. Having done that, the Kremlin will be free to continue mass production of the sophisticated bomber (the Soviet equivalent of the U.S. scuttled B-1 bomber).

By eliminating the Backfire from the arms limitation talks, the Soviet Union is certain to increase its lead over the United States in numerical strategic weaponry. Naively, President Carter's advisers do not consider the Backfire a threat, only because it cannot make a round-trip bombing run to the United States without refueling, and the Soviet Union does not have a refueling fleet.

What, pray, will the United States do when it wakes up and finds the Russians building a refueling fleet? Will it demand that the Russians stop, or scrap the Backfire? We took the Soviet word, back when SALT-1 was being signed, only to discover that the Kremlin routinely violated that accord by increasing its strategic missile capabilities through devious means. Mr. Carter may have conducted the peanut business with handshake agreements and gentlemanly promises. Unfortunately, the Soviet Union does not play by the same rules.

A Trade Truce

Presidential trade envoy Robert Strauss has declared an end to the trade war between the United States and Japan. Maybe It really is at an end; maybe only a temporary truce has been signed.

The problem is that the U.S. trade deficit to Japan is running at $8.5 billion annually. Japanese exports to this country are of such volume that U.S. labor groups are complaining that Japan is causing unemployment. The solution Strauss was hailing is a 10-point agreement signed in Tokyo. It calls for Jepan to remove quota centrols on 12 products, increase the quota for beef and citrus imports and reduce some tariffs.

Japan pledged 'reasonable efforts' to eliminate the $8.5-billion surplus. The United States pledged to improve its worldwide balance-of-payments position by increasing exports and reducing oil imports. Both the Japanese minister who signed the pact and Strauss want to avoid further pressures for protectionist legislation in the United States. The new agreement is a start of what is probably going to be a continuing process of adjustment.

Hard Questions and Some Answers at Malta Talks

By Jonathan Power

RABAT, Malta-Ian Smith, the white leader of Rhodesis, in his talks in Salisbury with Bishop Muzorews, Rev. Sithole and Chief Chirau, has accepted the right of the majority black population to form a government. He has given away the right to be prime minister. He helf given away the right of the whites to control the constitution in 1988.

How in fairness could one ask for more? Doesn't the idea of a transition to black rule which the resident whites and blacks themselves freely determine appear more sensible than attempting to line up, at a common starting line, elements as disparate as the Patriotic Front guerrilla armies and the Rhodesian Army's Grey's Scouts, not to mention five sets of feuding nationalist leaders, their supporters to the countries surrounding, plus the British, the Americans and perhaps, too, the South Africans?

ConorCruise O'Brien, in an Observer article on Jan. 22, went even further. He saked himself, drawing on his experience of dealing with the IRA as a member of the Irish government, what his position would be if there were a fair election under Smith's new arrangements and the Patriotic Pront went on fighting and killing He decided he would then feel about the Front as he does about the IRA-terrorists who should be crushed, Articles like this suggest that if they are not too careful, the British and U.S. negotiators here. Foreign Secretary David Owen and U.S. Ambassador to the UN Andrew Young, ed supporters of an outlawed guerrilla army that Western public opinion feels should be resisted right down the line.

Instincts

However, the O'Brien article raises more questions than it answers. Here are a few.

What is the most likely scenario for a post-Smith-type election in sia? It is this: In Salisbury, at the head of a black government, would sit Bishop Muzorewa, a churchman-politician who has only survived as long as he has tecause his sensible instincts sometimes triumph over his political ineptitude.
Muzorewa would be under attack from a mounting guerrilla offensive led by the Patriotic Front He would not have the time to put forward radical plans for land redistribution or for mass education for blacks. He would not have the time to change the white-dominated command structure of the army or the police force. Mazorewa would have no choice if he were to survive but to win the war. All his government's scarce resources would be concentrated on that purpose. South African trade and military support would be carefully nur-

What would happen if the British and the Americans in this situation recognized Muzorewa's government? The "front line" presidents of Tanzania, Zambia, Botswane and Mozambique would conclude that their lingering suspicions about the West had been proved right. From now on there would be no cooperation. The war against Rhodesia and South Africa would be waged without re-course to Western sensitivities.

Albatross

The Cubans, already installed with the Patriotic Front forces, would be invited to increase their contribution, Ethiopia, an albatross around Cuba's neck, might even be cast aside to enable them to contribute more effectively to a war that could more easily be seen as just.

In short, as Mr. Young says: "It would be a happy hunting ground for people from other ideological persussions who are seeking to do devilment. And they could do so with a minimum of investment."

In this situation, is the West going to send troops or military aid to Muzorewa? If the Patriotic Front "has become morally equivalent to that of IRA, Baader-Meinhoi, Italy's Autonomi," that is the logical next step in the O'Brien argument. But only to mention it reveals its weakness. For a single round of ammunition. sent to Muzorewa would be interpreted by the rest of Africa as a commitment against them. No matter that Muzorewa built himself an honorable reputation when he defeated the mischievous attempt by Britain in 1972 to impose an inadequate settlement on the Africans,

No matter that the foreign minister of Mozambique may have told Mr. O'Brien that his government doesn't always see eye to eye with the Patriotic Front. No matter that leaders like Nyerere of Tanzania and Kaunda of Zambia fear Cuban soldiers. None of this would make it possible for black Africa to turn a somersault on the issue that most emotionally inflames it—the end of white domination of Africa by direct or indirect means. The South African link with Muzorewa would be too strong for any compromise to be possible, Does all this mean that the Patriotic Front has had the British and the Americans by the tail in Malta? No, it does not and the talks do not suggest it. British Role

The British still have the legal authority to decide who should be internationally recognized as rulers of Zimbabwe, and they will not easily part with it. Besides, if the Patriotic Front accepts the British-U.S. plan rather than insisting on a fight to the finish, they would avoid two things not in their interest. First, the economic ruin of Rhodesia, the second most prosperous nation in Africa. Second, a situation of political precariousness that could well threaten the stability of the regimes of the Front's most important beckers-Nyerere in Tanzania and Kaunda in Zambia.

The pressure has been on here for the Patriotic Front to compromise and this they seem to have done in generous measure. Talk by the leaders of Western public opinion about recognizing Smith - formulated internal settlement diminishes that pros-

Assessing Mondale at 50

By James Reston

WASHINGTON_Vice-President Mondale was 50 the other day (Jan. 5)-a dicey time in life. This is the age when even the most successful politicians know what it means to be middle-used or caught in the middle-halfway between home and Washington, between their personal responsibilities to their parents and their responsibilities to their children, and hetween their political dreams and disappointments.

But this is not exactly true of Fritz Mondale. At 50, he still looks like an assistant to professional football coach Bud Grant unlike most vice presidents of this century, he is gaining influence after his first year in the vicepresidency rather than losing it. The more he does, the more he is asked to do. He was assigned the main task of helping President Carter avoid the legislative confusion of last year and define the priorities for this year. He was asked by the President to supervise the work of Michael Blumenthal of the Treasury and Charles Schultze at the Council of Economic Advisers on the selection of a successor to Arthur Burns as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board:

to the people...

Mondale has made this transition without forgetting who he is or where he came from He has moved from his old simple middleclass house on Lowell Street in Cleveland Park in Washington into the new vice-presidential residence—a Victorian monstrosity in the beautiful hill-topped park on Massachusetts Avenuewithout losing his sense of humor or proportion or his sense of wonder about how it all happened. He is probably going to have a hard time this year, not only with the Republicans in Congress, who will resent his efforts to defeat them, but also with the liberal Democrats, who resent Carter's retreat from welfare state programs, and rely on Mondale to uphold the liberal principles of Humphrey, and the New Deal, Fair Deal policies of Roosevelt. But Mondale at 50 is not the same as Mondale at 40 and the last years of the 1970s are clearly not the same as the decades of the 1930s through the 1960s. He notices that Minnesota may be very liberal on economic issues. but is very cautious about social issues involving the family, the church, abortion and crime. He is troubled by the avoidable controversies of the Carter administration over Burt Lance and particularly over the Marston case. but he is fiercely loyal to Carter and irritated by the efforts of his liberal friends to change the President's style. "Leave him alone," he says, his character is more important than his style. He will adapt to the political realities without losing his moral authority."

More Training

Meanwhile, Mondale is getting more training for the presidency than any other vice-president in this century, and as he goes through the 1978 congressional campaigns he will clearly pick up a lot of IOUs for the campaigns of the future.

Politicians don't always mea-sure birthdays by years, but by presidential campaigns. In 1981, Mondale will be 53, and in the campaign of 1984 he will be 56, still young enough to be a serious candidate for his party's presidential nomination He doesn't talk about this of course. He remembers with regret Humphrey's long run for the White House, his near miss, and the sadness of his defeat. But in a way, Mondale now stands where Humphrey stood almost a generation ago, as the leading candidate of his generation and party for the presidency, and how he handles his new and difficult responsibilities of this year may very well determine his political future.

Boom Is Muffled as Oil Town Mushrooms in Siberian Snow

By David K. Shipler

SURGUT, U.S.S.R. (NYT).—If this were oil country in Alaska or Texas instead of Siberia, this mushrooming city of 80,000 would be a boom town. It would be flavored with a neon-lighted strip of bars, an array of good restaurants, a plethora of wellstocked stores and plenty of young women plying their trade in the world's oldest profession. But Surgut is more wholesome and less luxurious, the product of an austere planned economy. It has grown with all the ex-travagance of a military camp, developing from a small settlement of log cables 13 years ago into a scattering of utilitarian five and six-story apartment houses today. The wealth of the nearby oil deposits has not really rubbed off, even though oil workers, who make up to four times the average Boviet industrial

Except for a small area filled with log cabins from earlier days, Surgut has no focal point, no design of human scale. It becomes a strange, characterless place that gives a visitor a sense of imbalant Even standing in the middle of the city makes you feel as if you must be at the periphery of a larger metropolis; you have the impulse to wander, to find the brighter lights, the busier streets.

They do not exist. In a centrally planned, state-run economy, urban development and retail trade are products of rnment decision, not of market forces. Resources are allocated and architectural plans are approved by Moscow, which seems to have adopted a parsimonious approach to Surgut despite the area's key role in future Soviet

As older fields elsewhere have started to run dry, production in this region has been increased and Surgut has grown eight-fold in population since 1965. It has been adding about 5,000 persons annually in the last five years and is scheduled to increase by more than 10,000 a year at least until the end of the century.

However, local officials complain of an acute housing shortage that forces most unmarried sidents to live in dormitories, and of inadequate kindergartens, cultural centers and entertainment facilities. Food stores seem adequately supplied with canned meat and vegetables, but no fresh meat was visible on a recent check of several of them, and a foreman on a drilling rig said that the meat shortage was worse this year than it had been in the Vodka is also a favorite. In the early evenings, hard-faced men from the oil fields crowd into a liquor store where it costs about $1 a bottle, Vocka often leads to fistfights, and hooliganism is a greater problem here than in more established cities, said Vladimir Kiselyov, who edits a thriceweekly paper called "To the Victory of Communism."

Rowdiness and drunkenness are such a problem that the local police force is supplemented by patrols of Youn Communist League members. Prostitution may exist, but probably not much, because nobody can live here without being allocated an apartment or a spot in a dormitory by the government-authorican easily keep out destrables."

Populating the city with the required assortment of people is not a problem. Those who cannot be attracted by high pay, such as oil workers and construction men, are simply assigned here. Doctors, teachers, en-gineers and others with higher education are often given threeyear tours here and in other harsh spots after completing their studies. When their three years are over, they are free to leave, although few can get permission to live in relatively desirable cities such as Moscow, eningrad and Kiev.

Many were born in this region and say that they are content to stay. Mr. Kiselyov, for instance, was been in the region and served as deputy editor of the local paper in the Siberian city of Nighnevarstovsky until the party transferred him to Surgut two

Owen Is Assailed For Apology on Saudi Executions

LONDON, Feb. 1 (UPI).-Labor party members today protested Foreign Secretary David Owen's "grovelling" apology to Saudi Arabia for Britain's comments on the public execution of a Saudi princess and her commoner

The princess was shot and the man beheaded, reportedly be-cause they had defled custom and married. The Foreign Office issued a statement last week deploring the "tragedy."

The Saudi government said last night that the couple was not married and had been sentenced to death by an Islamic court for adulterous acts. Mr, Owen then sent an apology expressing his regret that earlier comments had caused offense, the Foreign Office said.

Left-wing Laborites tabled a parliamentary motion saying that the House was ashamed of the apology. Martin Flannery, a member of Parliament, described it as "grovelling and humiliating."

Couture's Role in Refining Ideas

By Hebe Dorsey

FASHION IN PARIS

TOARIS, Feb. 1 (IHT).—The lack of surprise in the Paris couture collections is easy to understand. Couture is shown three months after ready-to-wear. Since the latter is the strongest of the two, both in terms of influence and sales, it follows that conture has to fall into step, rather than the other way around. The only exception is Yves

Saint Laurent, who can, and often does, use his conture collection to assert his favorite themes—giving the copyists a field day. But he, too, has to stay within the mood of his ready-to-wear, rather than Having killed the gypsy in his last ready-to-wear collection, it was fairly certain that Saint Laurent was in a mood for cleaner, more classic clothes. But few expected the dashing New Orleans pants-and-straw hat image he put

As for the rest of couture, although it no longer rules, it still has the authority to establish a number of limited trends by sharply focusing on them. This clears up the fashion picture which tends to be a bit fuzzy and diffuse after the ready-to-wear shows have died down. The threemonth lag is also useful because it gives designers a chance to assess what trends are the most successful—if only through their

The return to a slim line was emphatic. That direction came from ready-to-wear but it was swirling and generally voluminous skirts. Couture's approach is a firm "no" to volume and is paving the way for a strict, nest and narrow silhouette.

Other key points from the ready-to-wear showings, such as broad shoulders and tiny, belted waists, were also outlined in the couture collections. The casual, unlined, oversized

But since the custom-made ones were made of more lavish fabrics as well as cut along less extreme lines, they looked different, and certainly a lot less wild, than some of the ready-to-wear creations.

The tough, young man's style or Petit Jules look of the readyto-wear collections survived too. but couture designers treated it with a softer, less aggressive hand. The grandmotherly look with lacey vests, shawle or blouses was also familiar. But again, what the ready-to-wear designers did with rustic yarns, couturiers carried out with Chantilly lace.

When it came to colors there was a distinct difference. Readyto-wear was all for white, khaki and all the naturals. Couture banked on black, followed by

Oats have suffered from a bad press for centuries. Pliny, writing of the Germans who were dedicated oat eaters, asked disdainfully, "How can one eat the same food as animals?" Contempt for the oat may have been born at the time when it was less a food than a nuisance. for the oat is the Horatio Alger of cereals. It progressed, if not from rags to riches, at least from weed to health food. Wild dats first forced them-selves on the attention of farmers by invading fields of wheat or barley, from which they were pulled up and burned. Oats were eaten in Northern Europe, perhaps still in wild form, in Neolithic times; were est and most barren Bergman film since "Shame," according to Vincent Canby. It is also the "windiest and most banal since The Touch." The time is the week in 1932 when Hitler failed in his first attempt to take power. David Carradine is Abel, an American Jewish trapeze artist stranded in Berlin after his partner-brother has had a minor accident and commits suicide for no apparent reason. Liv Ulimann, his brother's widow, works in a whorehouse during the day and a sleasy cabaret at night. A police inspector suspects Abel of being implicated in his brother's death as well as in the unexplained deaths of a half-dozen other people he has known. "Is Abel going out of his mind? If you know your standard mystery movie, you know he is not, but the explanations that Bergman finally gives us aren't worthy of the mysteries he tantalized us with." It is a "melodrama that never quite makes any connection to the characters within it."

Plays

"The Maids," by Jean Genet "is an intelligent production, well performed and directed," according to Richard Eder. This is one of the few times since the play was first produced in 1947 that the cast is all male, as Genet apparently intended. "An important part of the play's strength is lost when Solange and Claire are played by men in women's guise." Sciange and Claire, "eternel prisoners in the lower depths of a dank servants' quarters, are an image of human subjection. They are obsessed with the mistress who dominates their existence..." The two maids are "sisters and one of the play's powerful and heartbreaking elements is the bond of flesh and nature between them... Transvestism onstage can project some things, but not sisterhood." Patrick Egan, as Solange, "is large, fierce and pitiful." Claire is played by Ted Britten

What makes two into one?

The Arab world is the richer for a new and powerful bank, the Albank Alsaudi Alhollandi. As the name suggests the Saudis and the Dutch have joined forces to create a new bank. This marriage of Dutch international banking expertise and Arab wisdom and influence promises to bring many benefits to Saudi Arabia.

The Dutch partner in the new bank is Algemene Bank Nederland which has been in business for 150 years and has already been established in Saudi Arabia for 50 years. In addition, the ABN-Bank has vast know-how throughout its offices in 40 countries on the five continents.

To this fund of banking knowledge Saudi Arabia now adds its potential and its Arab influence, together with the value of local Arab involvement that offers so much to the international businessmen.

The banking skills and financial influence that make up the Albank Alsaudi Albollandi introduce to the Middle East a truly modern bank of international strength and sophisticated facilities.

Dollar Surplus Seen as Block to World Recovery

SAARBRUECKEN, West Germany, Feb. 1 (AP-DJ).-The surplus on world markets has become not only the key problem of the international monetary system but also a possible obstacle to world economic recovery and to an upswing in the West German economy in 1978, Oimar Emming-er, president of the Bundesbank, said today.

Addressing a bankers' association here, Mr. Emininger suggest-ed that the United States take steps to reduce its current-account deficit and restore faith in the U.S. currency. To bridge the period until commercial capital flows take full advantage of interest rate differential, the United States, "like any other deficit country," should offer government instruments on the international capital market or else should sell more foreign currency, he said. He said that the United States has at its disposal large amounts of currency reserves in the form of special drawing rights as well as credits with the International Monetary Fund, not to mention its hage reserves of gold. Mr. Emminger said further that Bonn's official goal of 3.5 per cent real average economic growth 1978 will be achieved only if impact of the dollar's weakon the German economy is held within bounds, and if partners in current German wage negotiations "play their role" in keeping wage settlements moder-ate. # Another Economic Summit—But Why Bother?

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1 (WP).-The call has gone out for yet another economic summit, this time in Bonn in July. But one wonders, given the failures of the most recent heads-of-state session last May in London, whether the exercise is worthwhile. Today, international economic cooperation seems shaky rather than

There were three main economic decisions taken by the leaders at the Downing Street conference. As preparations begin for the next summit, it may be useful to recall them and then look at the record of results, if any.

The first was a pledge by the rich nations to meet some of the demands of the poor nations. The rich recognized the symbolism of "a common fund" to stabilize commodity prices, if not the massive opera-tion the poor nations wanted. But almost nothing has happened, and the latest economic report of the U.S. government shows that this country really favors a commodity-by-commodity, rather than a common fund, approach.

Second, the presidents and ministem promised they would meet their own economic growth or stabilisation targets. In effect, they said they would monitor actual developments and change their policies—not simply lower their sights—if they did not reach their goals.

The simple commentary on this pledge is that it has not been kept. West Germany put forward a 4.5 to 5-per-cent growth target, but actually achieved only 24 per cent. Japan promised 6.7 per cent, United States initially promised 5.75 to 6 per cent, but delivered only 4.9 per cent. Two "weaker" nations-Britain and Italyactually performed somewhat better than

Third, the leaders put their personal prestige on the line against protectionism, and promised to do nothing that would make world trade more restrictive. Again, that commitment has been honored only in rheterical outbursts about the sanctity of free and open trade, but not in performance. High unemployment has driven every political leader into some form or other of protectionism. In the United States, a number of protectionist steps have been defended as the "least worst"

And that may be an accurate analysis. The point is that recent events hardly conform to the hopeful platitudes of the Downing Street proclamation. But there is still a chance to redeem something of this pleage in trade negotiations at Geneva.

Overall, the somewhat grandiose expectations prior to last year's summit that the United States, West Germany and Japan would use their power to become "loca tives," pulling the rest of the world out of recession, have been dashed.

To be sure, Japan, under new pressure from the United States, has promised to boost internal economic activity, setting a 1978 growth target of 7 per cent. The Japanese attitude is helpful, but both Japanese and American experts privately concede that Japan will do well to hit The United States, sithough it has done partners, is not likely to have a better year of growth this year then last, and when comparisons are made on an end-of-year to end-of-year basis, is expected to show an unfavorable result.

The rich and powerful West Germans have the sorriest performance record of all. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt made plain to British Chancellor Denis Healey and to Prench Primu Minister Raymond Barre, who have been begging Bonn to step up its growth rate for 1978, that 3.5 per cent is enough-and that even that much is an amhitious target.

The West German government has spent a lot of time complaining about the "weakness" of the dollar, but the basic reason for dollar weakness, if it can he so described, is that the German and Japanese conomies have been flat while the United States enjoyed a moderate expansion. It is this factor, as much or more than the heavy U.S. oil imports, that lead to the extraordinary U.S. trade deficit.

Occasional hints drift out of Bonn, usually by spokesmen who refuse to be quoted directly, that Mr. Schmidt will take another look at the situation in the spring, in time to announce a cosmetie boost to the German economy prior to the West Germany should follow the Japanese lead of setting a significantly higher domestic growth target with programs to meet it. Then, not only would pressure on the dollar case but unemployment would fall in Germany, and the outlook for growth in all of Europe would be favorable,

Suitable for Defensive Bondholders

Floating-Rate Notes Shine as an Investment Vehicle short-term issues by investing in

By Robert Metz

NEW YORK Peb. 1 (NYT) The Pederal Reserve Board's effort to defend the dollar by acting to increase interest rates has unsettled the stock and bond markets and brought the joy of anticipation to holders of floatingrate notes.

Ploating-rate notes are a fairly new instrument that arose out of the pressing capital needs of leading banks and a major off company during the credit crunch of 1974, when interest rates were at the highest levels since the Civil War.

To solve the problem, Citicorp offered $250 million—mereased to $850 million as a result of their it agreed to adjust yields so that after a six-month lag at most the rate would increase a full per centage point above the prevailing rate on three-month Treasury bills. The rate would also be adjusted downward in times of fall-

In addition, as a recent Merrill Lynch market letter explains, most of these notes are rede at per every six months at the bolder's option, providing a way out for the investor when interest rates are declining and limiting place decline when rates are Clearly, the notes will begin to reflect the rising rate of the three-month Treasury bills soon The bills, which have gained 3/8 point: in recent weeks, now offer 8 7/8; per cent on a bond-equiva-lent basis.

Mr. Strauss told the Senate international trade subcommittee that the Japanese say they con cut their surplus with the United States of more than $10 hillion by $5 hillion or $6 billion this year.

However, he said he doubts that Japan can reduce its current account surplus by that much this year. The current account is trade in goods and services plus foreign income, and the $10-blilion figure is a record high.

Three ways to enter the gold market:

1.Gold.

If you really want to own gold, this is the way to do it. Get yourself a 100 oz. bar ($16,350 at this writing plus applicable sales tax), plop it on the coffee table, make sure it doesn't get stolen, lock it up at night—and you've got yourself a real conversation piece. If the price of gold goes up 10%, you've made yourself $1,635 minus the sales tax and assay fees. Or you could buy gold and have a bank keep it for you. Same $16,350—plus sales tax and storage costs—but no conversation piece.

2. Gold Stocks.

This is another way to enter the market but bear in mind that some North American "gold stocks" actually make or lose most of their money from other minerals, while many of the other mining companies are located in a country with a rather shaky political outlook. Of course, the quality of corporate management and many other factors affect the value of any stock.

Gold Futures.

This, in our opinion, is the most intelligent way to participate. No sales tax. No assay fees. No storage costs. In fact, you don't even own the gold. You own the right to buy (or sell) it at some future date at a pre-determined price. In futures trading you put up a deposit of less than 10% of the value of the gold. So if you bought a 100 oz. contract and the price went up 10%, you could double your money by merely closing out the contract. Needless to say, if the price went down, you would lose money—a risk inherent in any form of investment.

To learn more about the exciting prospects in gold futures, send in the coupon below or call toll-free 800-243-5000. In Connecticut call 1-800-882-5577.

THE SECRET ATLANTIS

By Otto Muck. Translated from the German by Fred Bragge Introduction by Peter Tompkins. Times Books. Illustration 272 pp. $12.50.

Reviewed by John Leonard

WHAT makes this book so much fun is that in the person of Otto Muck, a man very much of the 20th century, we have the nicest sort of 19thcentury German intellectual boundoggling. In Muck are conjoined the pedantic and the rhapsodic, plumbing and dreaming. It is as if one of the mothers in Part II of "Faust" had taken up lepidoptery or toy soldiers. (One thinks, in toy soldiers. fact, of Goethe's painstaking and wrong-headed theories on color vision. One also thinks, gloomily, of Spengierian rinse-cycles. The professor. his pockets full of notes, playing E-flat major on a bass bassoon, sinks with the burning barge into the bloody Rhine, only this time the Rhine is the Atlantic Coan. is the Atlantic Ocean. Wagner should have been there.

Muck-who died either in 1956 or 1965, depending on whether we are to believe the endpaper or the jacket copy of "The End of Atlantis"—invented the World War II U-boat snorkel and, at Peenemunde, the guided-missile rocket. Nothing could be more 20th-century than the snorkel and the guided missile. Muck's interest in devastation by ses and sky went back at least 10,000 years. He wanted very much for there to have been an Atlantis, for the myth to be true. He wished so hard that he made this book eclectic, ingenious, fanciful, argumentative. full of diagrams and exhortation. I believe every other word of Every myth requires some sort of text. The only text available to Atlantis is Plato's, which runs roughly 20 printed pages. Plato heard about Atlantis from his maternal uncle, Critias the Younger, who heard about it from his father, Critias the Elder, who heard about it from Solon, who picked it up from a priest in Egypt. Muck believes every word, including the ele-After all, he points out, the very notion of an island kingdom

If your opponents climb volumtarily to a contract of five spades and then put on the brakes. there are usually inferences to be drawn. If they have used Blackwood, it is safe to assume that the defenders have two aces. If not, it is likely that they have two quick losers in one suit,

In the type of suction shown in the diagram the message should be clear to West: North wants to bid a siam, but is concerned about the possibility of two quick spade losers, and South cannot help in that department.

When South's partner made a take out double of the weak twospade opening, he naturally jumped to four hearts. North had visions of slam and raised to five hearts, moleculary concern about spade control.

South had no more to say, and West should have drawn the right inference and led spades. Instead, he led the cinb ten, and South chose the best way to try for 11 tricks with chances of overtricks: After winning the first trick he cashed the A-K of hearts,

If the heart queen had remained outstanding South would have played a minor, planning a spade discard on third round of that suit. Given a normal 3-2 heart spile, this play would guarantee 11 tricks unless the player with the trump winner could ruff before the third round. As West's club lead might have been a singleton, South would have played diamonds.

As it was, the queen fell and South made 13 tricks by drawing the last trump and playing dis-monds. He would have h more interesting problem all spade lead to the ace and a tinustion of that suit, for would have had to guess trump situation. There would have been a for West's weak two-bid proc six higheard points and he not a player who was inc to deviate from his methods would be known to have at four points in spades, so he i ed the heart queen to maksix points.

By drawing this infer South would probably have ed the hearts in the same far to make the came.

Expert defenders could su in confusing the issue for declarer. West could safely the spade king instead of s. card, and South would have the heart queen, .

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1 (UPI). o winning season in 14 years. We George Allen returned to the Los Angeles Rams as head football coach today and promised not to trade away draft choices as he did in Washington.

Allen, 55, who coached the Rams from 1966-70 before he was fired, also said he would spruce up the team's offense with multiple-set formations.

In introducing Allen at a news conference Ram owner Carroll Rosenbloom emphasized that Allen would devote himself to coaching and teaching.

With the Redskins, Allen was general manager and gained a reputation for trading away draft choices to acquire experienced players. "I am fascinated by the thought of what a great coach George Allen might be if he were free of a'l the things he had to do in Washington as coach, general manager and janitor," Rosen-

Vinegar Versus Syrup in Movie Criticism

DARKS (IEIT).—The French film industry is an crisis, with attendance down by 5 per cent and production off by 17 per cent. But still Paris is a great frim town, with an enormous range of movies from all over the world, a public that gives the flicks the passion and prestige it used to devote to literature and art, and more film politics than one can shake a clapper

Cahiers du Cinéma was the great bible of nouvelle paque days (contributors included Godard, Truffaut, Chabrol and Robiner). Another magazine, Positif, which is now celebrating its 25th year and 200th issue, is a less doctrinaire and more enthusiastic guide to French tastes. "We are here to help artists, we cannot betp liking them," says Michel Ciment, a member of Positif's editorial board, author of books on Francesco Rosi, Elia Kazan and Joseph Lossy, and a teacher of American civilization at the University of Paris.

French and American tastes differ widely, the most striking example being the manimous enthusiasm of French highbrow critics for the unspeakable Jerry Lewis. A sweeping generalization one might make about the difference in French and American ettitudes is that a flim that has been called self-indutgent on the United States will win consideration as the film of an

Positid's birthday issue consists of con-tributions from the editorial boards favorites. Hollywood representatives toclude Capra, Kazan, John Booman, Losey, Minnelli, Sydney Pollack, Jerry Schatzberg, Douglas Sirk, King Vidor. Jerry Lewis was invited to contribute, but never replied. "We think that perhaps he never got the letter," Michel Chnent says hope-

Among the contributors to the special issue is Leonard Kastle, who hasn't made a film since "The Honsymoon Killers" seven years ago.

Keeping in Touch

"We try to keep contact with directors even when they aren't working," Ciment "What frightens me in France is the American capacity for oblivion. You are only as good as your last picture, not only for the producer but for the critic, which is terrible.

"Here, we take into account a person's long-term work. The danger of that attitude is that it can become hero-worship. But in America there is not enough of this continuity. A director is treated like a newcomer each time, and that is cruel. "With Beary Lyndon' I thought of Kubrick's other films and the thread that runs through them. If he spent three years on this film he had something on his mind. We should try to pender before making a decision."

"Barry Lyndon" had its greatest success in France. Right now, John Booman's sequel to "The Executet," "The Heretic," is winning high preise, although dismissed as a joke in the United States. After being acclaimed a gentus in the United States. Peter Bogdanovich has skpped way down to where Positif thought he belonged all along: While one American critic com-pared "The Last Picture Show" to "Citizen Kane," Positif gave it only a few lines.

The difference isn't only on American Illow. Positif never gave much space to Pasolini, although they gave Antonions an entire issue even before "L'Avventura." sco Rosi's "Exquisite Corpses" was praised in France but tepidity received in New York. Positiz detests the work of Line Wertmuller and does not even write about her: New York critic John Simon compared her to Bergman.

To Ciment, New York-critics are the problem: Snide, errogant, all powerful. One of them expressed admiration for "Exquisite Coopses" to Ciment, then gave it only a brief review 'because I don't think audiences will like it."

Critics' Mentality

"New York critics have the mentality of distributors," Chment says, "They non't want to support films that may be boxoffice dious."

With only 12,000 film buff readers, Posttif is of course freer than the New York press to initialize its enthusiasms and prolizity. It also has its house pets, such as director King Hu, whose work has been seen primarily in Chinatown and the Cannes Film Pestival

The main effect of French criticism has been the nevaluation of underrated older American directors: Replacing the Amer-ican film establishment's boly trinity of Wyler, Stevens and Zinnemann with Hawks, Minnelli and Vidor. "New York critics laughed, but now these directors films are taught in American universities," Coment says.

"Cinema is very quote realistic unquote. When you are in the country where the thing is produced you want to see a mir-ror reflection of your life. A tot of direc-tors of the '40s were dismissed by critics who said people don't talk like that or live like that. The French have always been interested in films, but not knowing Americs and not knowing the language and therefore missing whether the dialogue rang true, they concentrated more on aesthetic qualities—the comera work, the phythm of editing, the fantesy. So men like Hawks and Sirk and Minnelli were atimized here before they were rediscovered

France and the United States also differ on French films Bresson and Tati are more respected to the United States. "Cousin, Cousine," a small French film, trad a huge success in America and François Truffact is much more edmired in the United States than at home.

"Truffaut appears realistic but it's a romanticized view of reality," Ciment says. He is like René Clair was to Americans in the 1930s—charming, everyday French Truffaut's France comforts Americans. He has cheam end sweetness plus the reputation of a great master, which makes him artistically OK."

American Psyche

Americans do not want to be disturbed by films, Ciment says. "Altman's films are not all that successful in the United States because they are disturbing to the American psyche, 'Casanova,' Providence,' Berny Lyndon,' Exquisite Corpses' all got territale receptions in New York. They are all tough and brutal films—even Barry Lyndon' for all its beauty is absolutely terrifying in its end. New York critics are in tune with the American audience: After Victorian they don't want to see tough films. They don't mind violence, they can take blood and gore, but not real anguish."

Ciment thinks "Star Wars" and the work of Steven Spielberg mechanical: "They are film addicts' films." The three American films he liked best last year were "The Heretic," "Three Women" and "Annie Hall." This year he looks for-ward to the new films of Coppola, Terence Malik, Altman, Pakula and Cassavetes. Although he thinks that American film is not as interesting right now as it was in the early '70s, like his French colleagues, Ciment is full of enthusiasm.

French criticism in its entirusiasm risks becoming too solidified, too academic," he "American criticism is dynamic. Beech side has its defects and qualities. The French tend to raise monuments, the Americans change their shirts every day.

"The defect of French criticism is that there is too much syrup in it. In America there is too much vineger, On the whole I prefer syrup to rinegar," Ciment says, "because the artist is less damaged by it."

ed off with Playgirl Magazine in New York after the magazine delivered a low blow when he wasn't looking . Ali filed 2 $4-million lawsuit against the magazine, claiming that it printed an unauthorized obscene likeness of him in the nude. The suit said that the portrait in the magazine's February issue, by artist Tom Yansda and entitled "Mystery Man," is a clear and unmistakable likeness of him with genitals prominently exposed. He said the picture was offensive to him personally and also as a member of the Muslim faith. He asked that the issue be barred from sale and the plates of the drawing be delivered to him. Ali was also in New York to publicize a new comic book. "Superman Vs. Muhammad All." priced at $2.50, in which he knocks out the legendary man of steel

Two young South Africans got married in New York and asked for political asylum because, they said, if they return to their own country they will be thrown injail for being married. Therese Rable, 21, a nurse, is white, Salim Osman, 33, a shopkeeper, is Asian. Under South Africa's 1950 Immorality Act sexual intercourse and marriage between whites and nonwhites is illegal, The wedding in a small Unitarian church ended a clandestine twoyear romance. They fled South Africa 12 days ago. When they got visas for the United States, Miss Rabie said, "we went to the airport separately and ignored each other. We were so afraid someone was going to jerk us by the arm. We didn't sit together until we got across the border." The couple went to a friend's apartment after the ceremony. We stready had our honeymoon by just being able to come to this country," Osman said.

In Orlando, Pla, Dennis Wise, 24, who looked remarkably like the late Rivis Presley, underwent six hours of plastic surgery to make him look more like Presley. Wise plans to have an act imitating the late singer and to raise money with it for a museum to house Presley memorabilia. Wise's manager, Danny O'Day, said it
